Prevention of postoperative nausea and vomiting after laparoscopic or open cholecystectomy by nasal-mucosal infiltration of lidocaine versus lidocaine/epinephrine. Postoperative nausea and vomiting (PONV) remain a problem following laparoscopic surgery because of the emergence of pharyngeal, otic, and hypoglossal reflexes, as well as mucosal damage. We investigated the benefit of prior nasal-mucosal infiltration with lidocaine (LIDO group) or an equal combination of lidocaine (3 mg x mL(-1) lidocaine-epinephrine, 10 microg x mL(-1) epinephrine) (LIDO/EPI group) on the prevention of PONV after laparoscopic cholecystectomy. Two hundred and sixty-one patients scheduled for elective laparoscopic cholecystectomy were randomly assigned to receive LIDO or LIDO/EPI prior to the end of surgery. The patients were followed for the occurrence of PONV and clinical complications. A logistic regression analysis was used to evaluate the f678ea9f9e
